Robert A. Heinlein, 1907-1988

Robert Anson Heinlein was born July 7, 1907, in Butler, Missouri and died May 8, 1988, in Carmel, California. Son of Rex Ivar, an accountant and Bam Lyle Heinlein, he was the third of seven children. He married Elinor Curry in 1929 but they divorced in 1931. His second marriage to Leslyn McDonald lasted from 1932 until their divorce in 1947. He married his third wife, Virginia Doris Gerstenfeld, on October 21, 1948 and stayed with her until his death in 1988. None of the marriages produced any children.

Robert attended University of Missouri in 1925 and the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, graduating in 1929. He completed his graduate studies in physics and mathematics at the University of California, Los Angeles in 1934.

In 1929, Heinlein was commissioned as an ensign by the U. S. Navy, became lieutenant, junior grade serving aboard the aircraft carrier Lexington before becoming gunnery officer on the destroyer Roper. He suffered from seasickness and eventually contracted tuberculosis, which caused him to be retired from active duty in 1934 on a small pension. After the Navy, Heinlein worked at a variety of jobs besides writing. He was owner of Shively & Sophie Lodes silver mine, Silver Plume, Colorado from 1934-35, ran as a candidate for California State Assembly in 1938, and worked as a real estate agent during the 1930s. He also worked as an aviation engineer at Naval Air Experimental Station, Philadelphia, 1942-45, was a guest commentator during Apollo 11 lunar landing for Columbia Broadcasting System in 1969, and delivered the James V. Forrestal Lecture at the U.S. Naval Academy, in 1973.

His writing career spanned almost five decades, from 1939-1988. After working as an engineer during World War II, Heinlein returned to writing short stories and juvenile fiction in the late 1940s. It was during this time that he moved from the genre magazines in which he had made his reputation to more mainstream periodicals, particularly the Saturday Evening Post. About his career with the pulp magazines, Heinlein noted, "They didn't want it good. They wanted it Wednesday." (Pace, 1980).

As Joseph Patrouch wrote, "Heinlein was the first major science-fiction writer to break out of category and reach the larger general-fiction market, and therefore he was the first to start breaking down the walls that had isolated science fiction for so long." In a poll taken by Astounding Science Fiction magazine in 1953, eighteen top science fiction writers of the time cited Heinlein as the major influence on their work. His fictional writings repeatedly anticipated scientific and technological advances (Pace, 1988), from atomic power plants to water-beds.

In 1959 Heinlein published the first of what became a string of controversial novels. Starship Troopers, 1959, speculated on future societal changes, postulating a world run by military veterans. It spawned a deluge of controversy among his fans, and yet Starship Troopers is still one of Heinlein's most popular novels. It won a Hugo Award and has remained in print for more than three decades.

Heinlein followed Starship Troopers with Stranger in a Strange Land, which tells the story of Valentine Michael Smith, a Martian with paranormal cognition, who establishes a religious movement on Earth. Members of his 'Church of All Worlds' practice group sex and live in small communes. Stranger in a Strange Land is perhaps Heinlein's best-known work. It has sold over three million copies, won a Hugo Award, created an intense cult following, and even inspired a real-life Church of All Worlds, founded by some devoted readers of the book.

In subsequent novels Heinlein continued to speculate on social changes of the future, dealing with such controversial subjects as group marriage and incest. In The Moon Is a Harsh Mistress, lunar colonists practice a variety of marriage forms because of the shortage of women on the moon. In I Will Fear No Evil, an elderly, dying businessman has his brain transplanted into the body of a young woman. He then impregnates himself with his own sperm, previously stored in a sperm bank. Time Enough for Love: The Lives of Lazarus Long explores varieties of future incest through the immortal character Lazarus Long.

In the novel Friday, published in 1982, and later in Job: A Comedy of Justice and The Cat Who Walks through Walls: A Comedy of Manners, Heinlein tempered his social speculations by combining serious subject matter with rollicking interplanetary adventure.

In the 1950s, Heinlein entered the field of television and motion pictures. His novel Space Cadet was adapted as the television program, Tom Corbett: Space Cadet. He wrote the screenplay and served as technical advisor for the film Destination Moon, described by Peter R. Weston of Speculation magazine as "the first serious and commercially successful space flight film" which "helped to pave the way" for the Apollo space program of the 1960s. Heinlein also wrote an original television pilot, "Ring around the Moon," which was expanded without his approval by Jack Seaman into the screenplay for the film Project Moonbase. The 1956 movie The Brain Eaters, was based on Heinlein's The Puppet Masters, also without his knowledge or approval, and in an out-of-court settlement, Heinlein received compensation and the right to demand that certain material be removed from the film.

In 1994, Red Planet was made into a mini TV series, and The Puppet Masters was released starring Donald Sutherland. Starship Troopers, released in 1997, became his most notable film adaptation.

Virginia G. Heinlein, 1916-2003

Virginia G. Heinlein was born on April 22, 1916 in Brooklyn, New York, to George (a dentist) and Jeanne Gerstenfeld and had one younger brother, Leon. She died in Florida on January 18, 2003. Virginia attended New York University, majoring in chemistry where she lettered in swimming, diving, basketball, and field hockey. She also reached national competitive levels in figure skating, the sport that became her lifelong passion. In time, she came to speak over seven languages, including French, Latin, Italian, and Russian.

After graduating in 1937, Ginny worked for Quality Bakers as a chemist until 1943 when she enlisted in the Navy during World War II. She advanced to lieutenant in the Women Accepted for Volunteer Emergency Services (WAVES). She served first at the Bureau of Aeronautics, where she met Robert Heinlein in 1944 while both were working at the Naval Air Experimental Station in Philadelphia. She then served as his assistant on several classified development projects as chemist and aviation test engineer. After World War II, she came to Los Angeles to study for an unfinished doctorate in biochemistry at UCLA.

Virginia married Robert Heinlein in Raton, New Mexico in October 1948. Ginny, as she preferred to be called, became his closest companion, critic, editor, and staunch supporter. She was also his muse and model for many of the savvy, brainy, redheaded female protagonists in Heinlein's oeuvre.

Robert and Ginny were a formidable team. She fielded and co-coordinated much of his correspondence, and graciously received guests and fans in public appearances and in their home. She worked tirelessly with him on blood drives held at science fiction conventions around the country. Ginny was strong-willed and generous, and totally devoted to Robert. She nursed Robert through two life-threatening illnesses, spending years involved in every facet of his business and social life. Robert credited Ginny for the conception of Stranger in a Strange Land. When their health was robust, the Heinleins traveled extensively; their adventures around the world resulted in the travel memoir, Tramp Royale which Ginny published after his death. There is also evidence to suggest that Ginny also functioned as a political catalyst for the socially liberal Heinlein. Very shortly after their marriage, Robert's change in ideology from liberal to libertarian becomes apparent in his correspondence and his stories.

After Robert Heinlein's death in 1988 Ginny moved to Florida where she continued her interests in gardening, cooking, reading, and politics. She gathered a selection of her husband's letters in Grumbles from the Grave, printed for the first time his travel memoir Tramp Royale and political handbook Take Back Your Government (originally titled How to Be a Politician), and oversaw the restoration of several texts she felt had been badly edited, including Red Planet, Puppet Masters, and Stranger in a Strange Land. In her later years she was active in an online listserv where she communicated with fans about her husband's work.

To further her husband's legacy, she endowed the Robert Anson Heinlein Chair in Aerospace Engineering, at Annapolis, with a gift of over $2.6 million and helped found 'The Heinlein Society', an educational charity dedicated to the Heinlein legacy. She also endowed the public library in Robert Heinlein's birthplace of Butler, Missouri.

Elaine Woo wrote in her 2003 Los Angeles Times obituary that Greg Bear, a science fiction writer who knew the Heinleins, said he had met women who were inspired to become scientists by Robert's stories. "And Robert," Bear said, "was inspired by Ginny. Ginny was their original."

Scope and Content of Collection

This collection documents the professional and personal lives of science fiction author Robert A. Heinlein and his wife, Virginia G. Heinlein. Series I-II in the collection include Heinlein's manuscripts, short stories, articles, book reviews, screen plays, television and radio programs, personal and professional correspondence, publishers' papers, illustrations, photographs, slides, scrapbooks, memorabilia, and realia.

In the published manuscripts, short stories and reviews, Robert Heinlein's work centers on space adventure and future human endeavor, especially the challenge of the individual against the institution.

Galvanized by war and United States political policy, Heinlein drew on World War II, the Cold War, the Vietnam War, science and technology, and the social revolutions of the 1960's and 1970's. His passions are documented in his professional and personal correspondence: research into rare blood groups, bomb shelter construction, human freedom, the right to bear arms, libertarian politics, and the exploration of space.

Of special interest in the manuscript series, besides the manuscripts themselves, are the research notes and articles, mathematical calculations, formulas, diagrams, and drawings that Heinlein used to shape his stories. This material reveals Heinlein's skill as a researcher and scholar, and provides a fascinating insight to his creative process.

Robert and Virginia's letters to publishers and agents document the challenges of copyright, contracts, and editorial review. In Heinlein's personal correspondence with his family, and friends: authors, film directors, military comrades, scientists, and scholars, he discusses the changing ideals and morals of his time.

Of special interest in the correspondence series are the letters from the following individuals who represent the progenitors of early science fiction in print, television and film.

- Isaac Asimov, science fiction author
- Marion Zimmerman Bradley, fantasy author
- John Campbell, editor of Astounding Magazine, science fiction author, scientology aficionado
- E.J (Ted) Carnell, British science fiction editor. Ted Carnell's letters from 1942-1945 describe life in London, England during the war. Political and cultural references about the war effort, labor shortages, strikes, and military action may be interesting to the researcher of WWII history
- Arthur C. Clarke, science fiction author

- L. Sprague de Camp, science fiction author
  - L. Ron Hubbard, pulp and science fiction author, founder of scientology
  - Fritz Lang, German film director and writer
  - Captain Caleb Laning, Annapolis classmate, submarine and communications expert
  - Willy Ley, author, science editor, public lecturer, technical advisor, professor
  - Irving Pichel, actor, film director
  - Spider Robinson, science fiction author
  - Rip Von Ronkel, film writer and producer
  - William Parker White (A.P. Boucher), author, critic, editor

Manuscripts and related material, correspondence, and publisher material, represent the largest portion of the collection. Additional descriptive details are included within each series.

Memorabilia, ephemera and photographs in the collection span Heinlein's earliest years with his family, enlisted naval life, his marriages and travels with Virginia, and Virginia's life until her death in 2003.

Series II: Virginia G. Heinlein. For more than 40 years, Virginia served as Heinlein's muse, secretary, and companion, and her unflagging dedication to Heinlein's oeuvre was paramount. The Virginia G. Heinlein series includes biographical material, correspondence, and memoirs. The correspondence includes letters exchanged with Robert before their marriage, correspondence with personal friends, and communications with agents and publishers.

Scope and Content Note

Heinlein assigned opus numbers to each of his works, regardless of form. The manuscripts are in chronological order and the original opus numbering system has been kept intact.

Not all opus numbered materials are extant. Some opus numbers represent book reviews, speeches, interviews as well as collections or anthologies of previously published materials, e.g. Opus numbers 136, 146, 154, 155, 156, and 166. Others are missing from the collection entirely. Material does not exist for opus numbers 146, 154-156, 166, 168, 170, and 172. Still others, such as Grumbles from the Grave and Requiem, published posthumously, have been assigned [by Virginia?] Opus numbers [191] & [192], respectively and include tributes and essays by Heinlein's peers.

Scope and Content Note

This subseries contains support material for the manuscripts. Included are desk notes, research notes, articles, tear sheets, published versions, story fragments, artwork, posters, publisher display pieces, unpublished material written by Heinlein.

Also included are Heinlein's 3x5 card file of subject/idea cards. These include story ideas, phrases, possible topics and word play. Unlike the story notes found filed with the original manuscripts, the subject/idea cards appear to represent a general working collection of material kept by Heinlein for future use.

Notes on handling: Some of the research notes are fragile and written on poor quality paper. Measures have been taken to enclose the materials in protective enclosures and newspaper articles in the same condition were photocopied, however, as with many of the earlier manuscripts, extreme care should be taken while handling this material.

Arrangement

The arrangement for Related Materials is as follows:

- Subject/idea cards
- General research notes - not identified by year or story title. Other notes are of a general nature and represent the communication between Robert and Ginny, directions, advice, etc, for processing a story.
- Story title & year if known
- Research articles - grouped together by Heinlein
- Opus number & title
