Historical Note

During the summer of 1965, eight students from Stanford University spent ten weeks in the southern states tape-recording information on the civil rights movement. The eight interviewers -- Mary Kay Becker, Mark Dalrymple, Roger Dankert, Richard Gillam, James McRae, Penny

Niland, Jon Roise, and Julie Wells -- were sponsored by KZSU, Stanford's student radio station, and their original intent was to gather material suitable for rebroadcasting in the form of radio programs. Much attention was focused on white civil rights workers, although a great deal of other documentation relevant to black history was also obtained: the interviewers visited over fifty civil rights projects in six states (see appendix) and secured three hundred and thirty hours of recordings, including over two hundred hours of personal interviews. In addition to interviewing members of various, well-known civil rights groups -- the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party (MFDP), the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC or 'Snick') -- the student interviewers also recorded the formal and the informal remarks of those working with smaller, independent civil rights projects, of local blacks associated with the civil rights movement, and of many others including Ku Klux Klansmen and Southerners connected with the Sheriff's Department of Clay County, Mississippi. The interviewers, in addition, spoke with many white volunteers who participated in Snick's 'Washington Lobby' (aimed at unseating the all-white Mississippi Congressional Delegation) but who did not actually go south.

Several of the two-man interview teams recorded parts of the Jackson, Bogalusa, Greensboro, Crawfordsville, and West Point demonstrations, and also gathered various other action tapes of civil rights workers canvassing voters, conducting freedom schools, or participating in demonstrations. Finally, the interviewers recorded many mass meetings and gathered much material on the orientation sessions of MFDP in Hattiesburg, Mississippi and of SCLC in Atlanta, Georgia. All of these original tape recordings are now housed in the Library of Recorded Sound, Stanford, California.

The following pages contain transcripts of the majority of recordings mentioned above. It is hoped that these volumes will rescue from obscurity a body of information which we believe can be of great use both to scholars and to laymen interested in the dramatic history of the civil rights movement during the past decade. This material may prove to be especially valuable because it concerns a transitional period between the first 'freedom summer' of 1964, the high tide of civil rights, and the 'Meredith March' of 1966 during which Stokely Carmichael first voiced the compelling cry of 'Black Power'. In fact, at least one essay and a documentary history based on these recordings are already in progress, and it is expected that more will soon follow.

Many efforts were made to insure accuracy in the following transcriptions, but the reader should be advised that certain errors or omissions were found to be virtually inevitable given material of this complexity. The omission of fragmentary repetitions and of guttural pauses is indicated by ellipses, while proper names, in particular, were often not clearly audible, or, if audible, were open to various spellings; in such cases, typists were instructed to indicate their uncertainty by inserting a question mark after the word in doubt. Similar difficulties were sometimes experienced in transcribing Negro dialect which often sounded quite foreign to the ear of uninitiate northern typists. Careful listening generally obviated this difficulty, although we were still faced with the problem of spelling the several variants on a word which often characterized the speech of different southern blacks. Finally we adopted the same solution that was championed by B.A. Botkin in his introduction to Lay My Burden Down: A Folk History of Slavery. Botkin writes:

the original attempts at dialect-writing, successful and unsuccessful, were abandoned, except for a few characteristic and expressive variations....the fine distinctions of phonetic spelling (due to differences as much in the way a sound is heard or represented as in the sound itself) are for the specialist and get in the way of the essential qualities of spoken language, which are qualities of style, of word choice and word order. (p. viii)

Hence, our spelling is generally the standard dictionary version rather than a phonetic version which, inevitably, would have varied from typist to typist. In order to aid the reader, however, all interviews are identified by a number which corresponds to that number affixed to the original tape recording stored in Stanford's Library of Recorded Sound. Thus, the reader may refer to the original recording in order that he may personally catch the flavor and meaning of the initial interview.

Many of the interviewees are identified by name on the first page of the transcripts which follow. Because of the long time which has already elapsed since the interviews were recorded, however, it is requested that these names not be used in print unless the written consent of the interviewees concerned is first obtained.

In closing, we would like to express our thanks to the Stanford Institute of American History and to the Stanford Library for financial support which made possible the transcription of the original recordings. We would also like to thank Mrs. Betty Eldon of the Institute of American History who accepted the added burden of paperwork connected with this transcription project with tolerance and good humor. Finally, we acknowledge a particular debt to Professor George Knoles for his unfailing encouragement and support.

Scope and Content

This collection contains transcribed meetings and interviews with Civil Rights workers in the South recorded by several Stanford students affiliated with the campus radio station KZSU during the summer of 1965. The project was sponsored by the Institute of American History at Stanford. The collection includes information relating to black history; interviews of members of the Congress of Racial Equality, the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party, the NAACP, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee; transcripts of formal and informal remarks of persons working with smaller, independent civil rights projects, of local blacks associated with the civil rights movement, and other people, including Ku Klux Klansmen; transcribed action tapes of civil rights workers canvassing voters, conducting freedom schools, or participating in demonstration; speeches by and/or interviews with Ralph David Abernathy, Charles Evers, James Farmer, Martin Luther King, Jr., and Hosea Williams; and a Ku Klux Klan meeting and speech made by Robert Sheldon, its Imperial Wizard.
